Restoring the Landmark Skyscrapers:

HIGHLIGHTS

Constructed Abstractions
Burgeoning Geometries:
Constructed Abstractions
Whitney Museum of Art at Altria
120 Park Avenue at 42nd Street
Through March 11, 2007

At first glance, Diana Cooper's work hints at Frank Lloyd Wright's Usonian utopias and suburban office parks, with horizontal rooftops reaching into organic landscapes. Constructed out of delicately cut paper, felt, vinyl, foamcore and map pins, Emerger (2006) can just as easily resemble computer circuit boards intertwined with the lacy networks of the human brain. As part of the exhibition Burgeoning Geometries: Constructed Abstractions, it joins works by Tara Donovan, Charles Goldman, Jason Rogenes, Jane South, and Phoebe Washburn that pose conceptual questions about the natural and manmade environment. Washburn has created a site-specific scrapwood installation in the gallery, and Rogenes constructed Locus, a 38-foot tower built from discarded Styrofoam packed with electronic equipment. "The artworks represented are a phenomenon of a postindustrial landscape," explained curator Apsara DiQuinzio. "They are based on systems, social patterns, and behaviors that are driven by technology. Most of the materials that the artists use are recycled, making them an outgrowth of the waste cycles of a consumer society."
